PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

Oral History: Catching the Stories of Our Lives

Donna M. DeBlasio, Ohio Academy of History
27 March 2021

Oral history is one of the best tools for democratizing history; one does not need a PhD to engage in collecting, preserving, and presenting the past through interviews. Those who do so, understand the importance of recording the memories of people who were eyewitness to or participated in events in modern history. Oral history has long been accepted as a primary source that can illuminate the past in a personal and compelling manner. The power of oral history to enrich how we interpret the past is an important instrument in the historian’s toolbox. As we know, documenting the life stories and experiences especially of groups left out of the traditional history books has been greatly enhanced through interviews. It gives us a way to look at our past from many facets, not just from the “winner’s” perspective.

Oral history can be defined as “collecting spoken memories and personal commentaries of historical significance through recorded interviews. An oral history interview generally consists of a well-prepared interviewer questioning an interviewee and recording their exchange on audio or video tape [or digital format]”.1 The Youngstown State University oral history program, which I ran for over twenty years, notes that “Oral history allows us to use first-person narratives to explore the private dimensions of public careers, add new voices to the historical record, track the creation and recreation of historical memory, and present history to the public in creative new forms.”2

The earliest recognized programs in the United States such as the one at Columbia University, originally focused on history from the top. By and large, this young methodology on the US side of the Atlantic centered on collecting interviews with the elite. Oral historians in Great Britain, on the other hand, were more interested in interviewing average people. By the late 1960s, American oral historians began shifting their focus to the broader society. Several events and developments influenced the direction of oral history in the United States. The Civil Rights Movement, the Women’s movement, and other calls for social justice all contributed to demands for history to be more inclusive in its interpretation. At about the same time, the cassette tape recorder, with its greater portability, made doing oral history interviews far more accessible to more people. No longer were oral historians stuck with the fifty pound, decidedly not portable, reel-to-reel machines. Nor did the interviewees have to come to them. Rather, the interviewers could meet their subjects on neutral territory or places where they were most comfortable. Over time, oral historians have broadened our perspectives by interviewing people from all walks of life, catching their stories, all of which contribute to and democratize the larger narrative of historical interpretation. As someone who not only conducts oral history interviews, but uses them in my own research, I’m often amazed by the gems of stories that are there waiting for someone to discover them.

The urgency to catch individual experiences and stories is becoming even more tangible. The rapid and widespread growth of electronic communication has certainly altered many aspects of everyday life. While there is an overwhelming plethora of information, the question arises is how will we save these bytes of life for future generations? It’s not a surprise to anyone that archivists and other keepers of the past are developing ways to preserve this material, much of which is ephemeral and living in a cloud somewhere in the ethernet. While this material will provide fodder for future historians, it, like other historical materials, will need to be used with other sources. This is where oral history can become an even more valuable resource. People’s recollections about their life experiences, participation in or eyewitness to historic events, observations and reflections on moments in time will provide the future with invaluable keys to understanding the past.

The times we are living in are interesting, to say the least; they are monumental, to say the most. That we need to get these stories now is imperative. The events of this past year, culminating in the insurrection on January 6 (another date that will live in infamy), I think has created a new urgency to understand the times that we are living through. Doing oral history interviews I think can help us come to terms with the turbulence and upheaval surrounding us. We need to preserve how people are coping with and surviving in this landmark era. We need to get these stories now, not wait a generation as memories fade, people pass away, time changes perspectives. While there is value in perspective and reflection, there is also value in fresh memories and experiences.

This past year inspired the topic for my graduate oral history class this spring semester at Youngstown State University. YSU possesses one of the largest regional archives in the state, dating back to 1974, when Professor Hugh Earnhart started the program. In the early years, Hugh adopted what he called a “shot gun” approach, doing as many interviews on a wide variety of topics. Since I took over the program in 1999, I decided that we would have a more directed approach, selecting a specific topic for each time I taught the graduate course. I looked over all the topics that have been done over the years, and realized we had a paucity of interviews dealing with African Americans in the Mahoning Valley. Given all the deep discussions about race in America, I decided that African Americans would be the topic of our interviews. As I write this, each student has done at least one interview—and all the interviews have been very long and in-depth. The interviewees were gracious and open to discussing their feelings about race and racism, both in the past, up to the present. Besides the basic biographical information, the interviews are also covering topics like COVID, vaccinations, and Black Lives Matter. I’m very encouraged about the quality of these interviews to date and I think they will be valuable assets in preserving our history.

Of course, it’s not just conducting the interviews that’s important. They need to be accessible to a wider audience. The YSU program has a web site through the university’s Maag Library (http://www.maag.ysu.edu/oral_hist), where the transcripts as well as the audio interviews are available to the general public. Transcribing, which is the most difficult part of the process, is the way to go, since most end users often don’t want to listen to an entire interview to get the information they’re seeking and it’s also the truly only archival method of preservation. While voice recognition software exists, it’s not sophisticated enough to deal with transcribing multiple voices as one would have in an oral history interview. For anyone interested in transcribing, it takes 8 to 10 hours to transcribe about one hour of an interview. That being said, digitization does allow us to upload the raw interviews and make them accessible to the general public. Or, as we said back in the days of the cassette tape—oral history interviews do no good sitting in storage inside of a shoe box. We must make these interviews available to all, whether in an on-line archive, through publications, web sites, exhibits, or other methods of disseminating these important stories.

The state of Ohio is remarkably rich in oral history projects at all kinds of agencies including institutions of higher education, museums, historical societies, archives, and libraries. Less obvious entities that house interviews are for-profit corporations, non-profit organizations, and religious institutions. This is not to mention the many individuals who have collected interviews with family members to preserve for their descendants. Ohio based projects are the tip of the proverbial oral history iceberg; there are hundreds of oral history projects and programs in existence globally. Oral history has become the embodiment of what Carl L. Becker described in 1931, “Everyman his own historian,” or as revised for our time: “Everyone their own historian.”

Oral history interviews provide us with a window to the past, but they are the product of memory and subjective interpretation. Oral historian Alessandro Portelli challenges us to rethink our concepts of how people recall their own pasts. In his important essay, “The Death of Luigi Trastulli,” Portelli believes that oral histories are subjective and that how we remember the past is at least as important as what we remember. Oral history interviews are primary sources and should be treated as such, subject to historic analysis and interpretation in conjunction with other sources. This does not negate their value or their importance in giving a “voice to the voiceless.” The momentous events of 2020 should spur us to redouble our efforts in catching the stories of our lives.

1946 RECONSIDERED

Filson Historical Society Biennial Academic Conference

In 1950, WWII veteran and Louisville architect Stratton Hammon wrote to a colleague at Better Homes & Gardens magazine:

“Before the war, Louisville was one of the lowest building cost markets in the country because its economy was largely based on agriculture, horses, corn for whiskey and tobacco. The war, however, changed all this. Because we have a hydroelectric dam here, a tremendous number of large plants located here—rubber, aircraft, aluminum, International Harvester, etc. This at once changed our non-union town to a union town and the price of building is, I believe, much above the balance of the country because of the high wages and because we have never yet caught up with the industrial building program.”

Hammon accounted for the sea changes he had seen in his professional field, but the social, demographic, spatial, institutional, and environmental changes wrought by the war went beyond the recounting of any one individual. What had Hammon overlooked? What changes were afoot in 1950 that would more fully emerge in later years? How was his world—and ours—fundamentally reshaped after soldiers and civilian war workers returned home?

The conference will feature a hybrid in-person and online format. It is scheduled to run for two days, with approximately six sessions and an evening keynote. Individual papers, roundtables of structured discussion among four to six participants, and traditional panels of three papers plus a commentator will be considered.

The Filson is committed to ensuring that this conference has a long afterlife with diverse audiences. The editors of Ohio Valley History will produce a thematic special issue from some selected papers given at this conference.

Among the topics of interest to the conference are:

- Migration within and out from the region
- Redlining, suburbanization, and white flight
- Agricultural change including mechanization, centralization of landholding, pesticide usage, and the coming of monocultures
- The GI Bill and expansion of state higher education
- The VA, hospital expansion, and changes to healthcare
- Male veterans’ reintegration into the workplace and civil life
- Displacement of women and African Americans from the postwar workplace
- Changes in the coal industry, particularly the shift to surface mining
- TVA, dams, and electrification
- Early civil rights organization in African American and LGBT communities
- Expansion of permanent military bases at Ft. Campbell and Ft. Knox
- Conversion of war-related industry to civilian production
- Evolution of transportation infrastructure, the rise of car culture and decline of rail and river
- Demographic and cultural changes brought by the Baby Boom
- Development of musical styles rooted in the Southern diaspora including rock & roll
- Communications change and the rise of television
- Anti-Communism in politics, the workplace, and popular culture

Ohio Academy of History Statement on HB 322, HB 327

The Ohio Academy of History is a professional society bringing together teachers, scholars, public historians, and students interested in all fields of history. We seek to promote the development and dissemination of historical knowledge among the citizens and students of Ohio. The Academy promotes high standards of historical scholarship and teaching in the state’s schools, colleges, and museums and was chartered to promote the study and teaching of history. Given our commitment to knowledge and its dissemination, the Academy opposes passage of HB 322 and HB 327. Interpreting and presenting the past is a complicated endeavor. Historians examine primary sources ranging from written materials to everyday objects to photographs, to films, to oral histories—a wide range of objects and archival resources to understand the human experience over time. In the process, we strive to understand the past by placing people in the context of their own time. As teachers of history, we encourage students to carefully examine primary sources and think critically about what they are reading and observing.

One of Ohio’s founding documents, the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, states: “Article the Third. Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.”

With this in mind, we strongly urge the members of the Ohio General Assembly to vote no on HB 322 and HB 327.

— Brooke: OSU-History Department will pay two grad student co-hosts $35/hour for their work during the conference.

Local Arrangements-Fall
— Robinson proposed another virtual Executive Council meeting in the Fall, and the consensus was yes.

Program Committee: Cashin, via email
The Program Committee for the 2020 annual meeting consisted of Joan Cashin, Chair, Amy Fluker, and Chris Phillips. We put together an excellent program of fifteen panels (15) and a distinguished scholar lecture for the conference; the meeting would have taken place in March at Ohio State University but for the pandemic. When the Executive Council agreed in summer 2020 to move the meeting online and hold it in March 2021, I contacted all of the participants. Three people dropped out, and all of them were replaced. All fifteen panels carried forward to the 2021 meeting, with the same high quality, and the distinguished scholar agreed to stay on board. We will cover many fascinating topics on American history and other fields, and the participants are a diverse group of scholars from different backgrounds, in Ohio and beyond the state. I wish to thank Amy Fluker and Chris Phillips for their hard work on the committee, especially the fact that they did double duty for both conferences. Submitted by Professor Joan Cashin, Department of History, Ohio State University, 19 March 2021.

Membership Committee: Mujic
— Had a good turnout for virtual Meet and Greet events, and good, productive conversations.
— Event coming up in April, already have 14 tickets sent so far. Advocacy and activism is topic, and will have a guest speaker.
— Robinson wondered if this can grow into a professional development opportunity in the future. Mujic was open to this if we kick around and plan accordingly in future. Will depend on how active the committee is or will want to be.
— Will have to see if Zoom burnout will dampen enthusiasm for this in the future.
— Robinson and Kern wanted to thank Membership Committee for all the wonderful work and ideas they brought to the committee this year.

Nominating Committee: Fluker
— Google ballot for the elections set up and will be distributed.
— Need to know who will be next chair so she can advise them on what to do next year.

Awards Update: Hedler
— Plaques have been mailed from last year. Will send out new plaques as soon as we have addresses for recipients.

Public History Committee: DeBlasio
— Committee reconstituted. Main job was to do the Public History Award: Ft. Meigs Association Podcast. Will work toward getting more Public History groups involved
— Newsletter—went out this year
— Proceedings—will do peer review after they present this year.

Awards Committees: Robinson
Distinguished Service Award: tba

Public History Award: The Foot of the Rapids: A Fort Meigs Association Pod Cast.
Dissertation Prize: No submissions.
Junior Faculty Research Grant: No submissions.
Distinguished Teaching: No submissions.
Publication Award: Professor Adam J. Davis’s exemplary work, The Medieval Economy of Salvation: Charity, Commerce, and the Rise of the Hospital (Cornell University Press, 2019). Professor Adam J. Davis is a member of the Department of History, Denison University, Granville, OH, where he specializes in Western Medieval social history. He is the Director of the Lisska Center for Scholarly Engagement, Fellows Hall - 426, Denison University, Granville, OH 100 West College Street, Granville, Ohio 43023. Email is davisaj@denison.edu.

Old Business: Robinson
— Have used it a bit so far for a few things, but this brings up questions
— Managing the database:
— Who can use it?
  Vemsani: We can use it for our own purposes, but we cannot lend it to any other group. Another historical group was sued for doing this, so we should avoid that.
  Robinson: Should have a database for programs in Ohio. Can invite each program to send in a page or a link to their program.
  Mujic pointed out that Hedler needs to be in on these conversations before anything is decided for sure.
— Who will manage it?
  --Should Secretary-Treasurer maintain (using grad students update)? Consensus was yes.
  --Should this be available to all Executive Council members and Standing Committee Chairs? Consensus was yes.
  --Is currently on Robinson’s Google Drive.

New Business: Robinson
— Podcasting—a membership benefit?
— Profiles of faculty or graduate student research
— Current events in historical context
— Want to grow and modernize our footprint beyond Proceedings. Will send out survey to see how much interest there would be.
— Fluker suggests that the podcasts be short and sweet so they are more usable.
— Mujic suggested that to keep us relevant we should create the sense of community among all of the levels of history in the state. We could do something innovative by creating a mechanism through which there is real collaboration and partnership among all levels of history. Find synergies of all types of history in the state.
— Robinson: maybe a meeting in early summer to try to brainstorm and plan for this initiative. Will help in planning this effort. Maybe late May/early June.

Next meeting? TBA

Motion to Adjourn: Keefer moved, DeBlasio seconded to adjourn, Unanimously approved at 2:30.

My last of 13 years’ worth of minutes, respectfully submitted 3/19/21
9:00 a.m. via Zoom
Present: (virtual) DeBlasio, Keefer, Robinson, Hedler, Mujic, Bednarek

The meeting was called to address how the Ohio Academy of History should respond to the actions of the state legislature (bills proposed concerning the teaching of history in Ohio).

Should the OAH ask members to send letters to their representatives? If so, what would be the appropriate timing for such letters?

Discussion then focused on creating a statement that would be posted on the Ohio Academy of History website and newsletter.

Also, should Ohio Academy of History sign on to the statement released by the American Historical Association? After discussion, the executive council decided that the OAH would sign on to the AHA statement.

The executive council decided to create a statement for the website and newsletter, also to be sent to the Ohio Academy of History membership. DeBlasio and Robinson finished wording of statement.

DeBlasio and Bednarek contacted the AHA to add our endorsement to their statement. The OAH statement will include a statement asking members to contact their representatives concerning HB 322 and HB 327 and state their position on this pending legislation.

The meeting ended at 10:00 a.m.
